The Germans have taken the city of Riga, the big Russian port and naval base, on the Baltic. The city was not defended, and the Germans marched in after little or no resistance.

Twenty-three vessels were sunk, last week, by submarines or mines.

The Italians are continuing their advance against the Austrians, and they are practically through the mountains.

The Russians are still retreating along the lines running south from the Baltic.

The wheat crop that has been threshed so far, in this district, is averaging 15 bushel to the acre.

Re New Bridgen Picnic

To the Editor:
I have watching for several weeks for an account of the Red Cross picnic, at New Bridgen. The committee promised to send you full particulars, but I understand this was not done. Altho the time is now rather late, I wish to personally thank the people of Monitor and also in Kirriemuir for their donations and help in making this picnic a success, and thus, in a measure, atone for the tardiness of those responsible for this neglect.

Yours truly

While they ate, Mrs. Bartlett, who had pushed up her veil far enough to enable her to eat without revealing her features, watched Dolly keenly from behind the veil. The brightness of her eyes was visible through the meshes of the veil. Dolly was very pale, very apathetic. There was a dull look about her, as though she were drugged. She ate in silence, apparently unknowing what she ate, and except for an occasional inquiry from the man who sat next her, she did not eat or drink, the meal passed in silence. There was so much chatter at the other tables in the salle a manger that their silence might well pass unobserved.

When the meal was over they left the hotel. The rain had left off, although the sky was grey and cold and the damp wind nipped.

Cooper, with his strange politeness, inquired the wishes of his companions as to whether they would walk or drive. They elected to walk for the sake of the fresh air. The canteen had been stifling, the salle a manger of the Lion de Flandres steamy.

They went down hill, over the slippery cobbles of the streets, between the high houses—a stream of water in the gutters running with them all the way. At a shop which bore the sign of Au Petit General, Cooper stopped.

"Get whatever clothes you require for yourself and your lady; it is a good shop," he said, and handed a ten-pound note to Mrs. Bartlett. "I will smoke my cigar while you are shopping."

While they made their purchases—some warm wraps, a change of clothing, combs and brushes, and a few other necessities—Cooper walked up and down outside, concealing his impatience, if he felt any. Now and again a woman, tripping by daintily, her skirts held up on each side, of the Frenchwoman does it, from the wet cobbles, would send a sideways look at the dark handsome face; and in spite of his preoccupation the man was not unaware of those glances, did not fail to respond to them by an amorous glance from the velvety eyes with the yellow whites. It was his way with women—a detestable way.

An obviously English party—a white mustached man, well set up and clean-looking, a comfortable matron, and a couple of rosy-cheeked, blue-eyed girls, came into the shop. Having made some purchases, they asked for the whereabouts of the British consulate, and were told. Mrs. Bartlett, waiting for her change from the ten-pound note, listened eagerly for the answer.

Their shopping done, they entered a tram and were carried up to the Ramparts. Leaving the tram at its furthest point, they walked on over hill, to where the ground began to fall again to the level country dotted with its church towers, its steep roofed villages, its rows of formal poplars marking where the road lay. They went on without asking questions. They had walked quite a long way before Cooper pulled up short. There was a cart of the country, closely hooded over, standing at a corner where four roads met.

The rain had begun again, more hopelessly than ever, and a chill, bitter wind blew. There was no shelter in the long straight road. "He covered cart was welcome. It was better in it than outside. Perhaps that was why Mrs. Bartlett helped Dolly in so quietly and took a seat beside her under the hood. They sat on hard planks, but it was better than outside; it was comfortable by comparison, their feet fresh, warm, dry. Cooper mounted up the side of the driver. The two men sheltered the interior of the cart from the rain, which blew in their faces. Cooper had lit a cigarette and smoked with an unconcerned air, turning round now and again to ask them if they were comfortable.

On they went, the silence only broken by the cracking of the driver's whip and Cooper's occasional inquiry. The backs of the two men filled up the front of the cart. The driver of the queer-looking cart had a monstrous head, which looked to one side. The curtains were fastened together at the back. Above the heads of the two men nothing was visible but the darkening sky and the driving rain.

It was very cold and draughty inside, although it had seemed warm when they escaped from the bitter wind and rain into the shelter. The seats were hard and the atmosphere intolerably stuffy despite the draughts. Dolly had fallen asleep, leaning against Mrs. Bartlett's shoulder. Mrs. Bartlett nodded after a time, despite the crampedness of her position, came to with a confused sense of what was happening, and nodded again.

It seemed to her that they had been going on for interminable hours, during which Dolly's head had jerked to and fro against her shoulder while she tried to keep it steady. She awoke to a sense of increased light and air. Cooper and the uncouth driver had got down. The cart had stopped.

While she wondered what was going to happen, Cooper came round to the back, undid the curtains, and announced that they had reached their destination. The cart was standing before a gate in a high wall.

Stiffly they obeyed him and alighted, standing to one side while he gave some money to the driver. There was something the matter with the driver. He seemed to have no control over the muscles of his neck, his mouth fell open, his eyes were without intelligence. There was a smell of the sea in the air, but all detail was blotted out in the pall of the steady rain. The road by which the cart went away, down hill, was apparently a cut track. There were some grey huddled shapes in the mist—sheep. A little bell sounded somewhere close to them—a sheep bell.

The two drew together, forlornly, while Cooper fumbled with the lock of the gate, which seemed to give him some trouble. Mrs. Bartlett looked at Dolly, who had begun to come awake and wore a chill and frightened look. To her imagination a question seemed to form itself on the girl's pale lips.

"Why did you let him bring me here, away from the world that would have protected me?"

"Why?"

The woman had hardly thought of why. She seemed to realize for the first time that they were in Cooper's hands completely—the last person from the outside world going further and further away from them into the mist that hid all beyond it.

She drew nearer to Dolly, taking her cold hand into a close grasp. "Nothing shall hurt you, my lamb," she muttered under her breath.

Cooper straightened himself, pulled the gate from the lock, pushed at the gate with all his strength, and it opened before him.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Farm House Amid the Dunes.

The door shut to behind them as they passed through and they heard the key turn in the lock.

They were in the courtyard of a farm house. All around three sides of the square it formed there were farm buildings. The centre of the courtyard had evidently once been a garden; but now, even in the dusk they could see that the beds were overgrown with weeds. In the centre there was a figure, stained by the weather and broken in places, which might have been St. Roch, for there was a dog by his hand. The figures were almost hidden in the tall grasses, that choked what had once been flowers.

The fourth side of the square was formed by the house itself. It had originally been whitewashed but was now sadly in need of another coat. The lower windows were barred and the bars rusty. A climbing rose had fallen from the walls and lay across the path. The panes were covered with cobwebs. There was not a sign of life. Through the dusty panes one could see that the rooms were black and fireless within. The creeping dusk was over everything.

"It is not so bad," said Cooper, as though he guessed the chill in the hearts of the tired women. He was unlocking the door as he spoke. "I am sorry I did not foresee that we would need a fire. I shall have a fire lit for you in no time. It is not so long since I was here for a flying visit. It is not so unkind to house even Miss Egerton. When I have lit the fire I will fetch whatever you may want from the village."

The door opened with a sudden force, as though it yielded to pressure, and he stood back to let them enter. A chill air, cold as the grave, breathed upon them from the lounge. Damp, of course; what else could it be? The walls streamed with damp. The room, not an unpleasant one, with its austerity of sanded floor and very little furniture, was apparently reeking with damp. The surface of the mahogany table, the crockery on the dresser, were blurred; the copper pans and brasses on the wall were dull; the mirror over the mantle-piece was as though it rained tears.

"It is not so damp as it seems," Cooper explained. "The house was built with sea sand in the mortar. It always weeps of a wet day."

Dolly stood forlornly shivering in her warm wraps, gazing about her as though she did not know where she was.

"I'll have a fire in a few minutes," Cooper went on. "Take her up stairs. By the time you come down things will be different. I shall have a servant for you presently. You can live like princesses—the ugly and the beautiful."

He laughed impudently, taking up the basket which stood by the hearth

Christian Civilization In Manifest Peril

From an Address by Robt. Lansing, U.S. Secretary of State

My friends, I am firmly convinced that the independence of no nation is safe, that the liberty of no individual is sure, until the military despotism which holds the German people in the hollow of its hand has been made impotent and harmless forever. Appeals to justice, to moral obligation, to honor, no longer avail with such a power. There is but one way to restore peace to the world, and that is by becoming German imperialists by force of arms. For its own safety, as well as for the cause of human liberty, this great republic is marshalling its armies and preparing with all its vigor to aid in ridding Germany, as well as the world, of the most ambitious and most unprincipled autocracy which has arisen to stay the wheels of progress and imperil Christian civilization.

Below will be found an ap-looked for from the people of Canada. This Fund is used to render emergency relief in the districts recaptured from the Germans.

The Imperial munitions board in Canada announces that the production of munitions in the Dominion is to stop. That probably is the most effective way to stop those big war profits.

The price of wheat having been fixed at $2.20, in the States, no doubt will govern the price in this country. The best feature is the setting of the price at different points and the low figures between the various grades.

The Newmarket Herald tells of a man, near there, who had 300 bushels of wheat. He had refused $3 a bushel for it. A few days ago lightning struck the place. You know the rest:
No insurance, and the man figuring out now what he might have done with the $900.

What shall it profit a man to abstain from meat on Tuesday and Friday if on the other days of the week he eats twice as much as usual?

We've substituted corn for wheat,
And pallid cottage cheese for meat;
With nobly simulated zeal
We chew the dull potato peel;
We've tasted every new disguise
For making rice a glad surprise,
And never throw a thing away
But mingle all in queer puree.

Our idea of an honest man is the chap who said that owing to the increase in the price of cornstarch he had to put up the price of ice cream.

Mr. Farmer:—Why not have a name for your farm, and use printed stationery—paper and envelopes? You sure must have letters written from your home.

Well it costs no more to use high-class, printed stationery, which will give your correspondence a more tasty appearance, as well as advertise your farm. Try The Monitor News for this class of work.

Your Eleven Acres

One Person Must Live Off The Production Of Eleven Acres

The earth has a little less than 17,000,000 square miles of total surface. A little over a fourth of this surface is land, 55,000,000 square miles of it. And of this 28,000,000 square miles, or a scant fraction over one-half, is soil that can be used for food production. The rest is desert, mountain range, and polar regions. A little of this might possibly be reclaimed, but not very much.

So here we have two vital facts in the practical geography of today: There are 1,600,000,000 people on the earth to feed, and 28,000,000 square miles of tillable land with which to do it. Or, reduced to figures in which we are more accustomed to think, this means that one person must live off the production of eleven acres, on an average, the world over. Don't say, "It can't be done," for it must be done or somebody will starve. In Belgium today, as for the last two years, helpless mothers watch their babies slowly starve to death before their eyes. Poland is in almost total famine, a plight, judging from the fragmentary reports that have filtered through, and all Europe is suffering to some extent, the poor especially—Famine and Famine.

Thousands of mothers can testify to the virtue of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator, because they know from experience how useful it is.

Open Air Lessons

Kensington Gardens are becoming quite an academy (says a writer in the Daily News and Leader). Almost any warm day now you find little private school classes in all sorts of out of the way nooks—tiny children in a circle with the teacher in the centre. In fact, the Gardens have become quite an open-air kindergarten. Students of all kinds may be seen with their paraphernalia. Child water-color artists are numerous, and yesterday I was amused to see a tiny maid sitting in isolation upon a great volume of Beethoven, while she worked engrossed at a manuscript music book in her hand. It is sad that education under such conditions should be at the mercy of a capricious climate.

Changed His Mind

A man of notoriously bad character residing in a village wished to emigrate. To obtain assistance from the emigration commissioners one must have a character, and the man accordingly asked one from the neighbors. Everybody was anxious he should go, and everybody therefore testified to his excellent reputation. No one was more astonished than the man himself at this result and after looking at the certificate with its long list of signatures, he said, "Well, I had no idea I was so much esteemed in the neighborhood. I think I shall stay."

A Family Reunion

The Real Englishman Now Meets the Real American

As an American minister, the Rev. Dr. J. F. Newton, now pastor of the City Temple, London, very truly says in a recent article in the Pall Mall Gazette: "America enters the arena with no undue optimism, with no illusions; but as regards the ultimate outcome, without a shadow of doubt. No man can foretell what effect this alliance between the United States and England may have upon our future relations. The entry of America is like a family reunion of those who have been living apart for a while. You will presently meet a new kind of American. You are already familiar with the 'globe-trotter,' the 'get-rich-quick' and the speculator. Now, the real American is going to meet the real Englishman! They will meet as comrades in the trench and on the fighting line. This means unpredictable things—things impossible by any formal political alliance."

How Shrapnel Works
A shrapnel which breaks properly during flight slightly scatters shrapnel balls, not fragments and pieces of jagged shell such as fly from an exploding high explosive shell. When a shrapnel, through failure of the time fuse to respond, does not explode until it comes in contact with the ground or some other firm object in its path, then, and only then, the steel shell is fractured and pieces scatter in all directions.

FIGHTING FOR HAPPINESS

When you get into a frame of mind that makes life one dreary duty after another, with no pleasure in it; when ill-health seems to take all the joy out of life and you worry over things that are really not worth worrying about, then your nervous system is becoming exhausted, and you are on the way to a general breakdown in health. In this condition of mind, health and happiness is worth fighting for and good, rich, red blood is what your system needs. It is a hopeless task to try to live on your own white blood, your blood is deficient either in quantity or quality. And remember that no medicine can be of any use to you that does not build up your weak, watery blood.
To build up the blood and strengthen the nerves there is one remedy that has been a household word for three generations—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. It is the actual mission of these pills to make new, rich, red blood, which strengthens the nerves and explores the entire system. They give you a new appetite, make sleep refreshing, put color in the lips and cheeks, and drive away that unnatural tired feeling that oppresses so many people. If you want to experience new health and happiness give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial. You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Britons Must Be Adaptable

Sir Thomas Lipton, the well-known sportsman and successful merchant, discoursed the other day upon the conditions of success required to make Great Britain a greater commercial power than she is at present. He used illustrations from his own travels.
"In India," he said, "the hens lay little eggs, which in a British egg cup sink so low as to be hard to handle. Often I had noted this and wondered why English manufacturers had not made little egg cups for use in India. One day in Benares I saw a small mouthed egg cup which held the egg well up, conveniently. Enterprising at last I thought, 'I was right. But it was German enterprise. That's a tiny illustration of the sort of chances which an adaptable people can take in all parts of the world. Trade? There are uncounted quantities waiting everywhere in the British empire to be picked up.'"

Tree Plantings in Alberta
John Gleichen of Alberta, has planted many trees on his farm near Gleichen. Five years ago he planted 1,000 trees, seedlings and cuttings. They were obtained from the government forestry station at Indian Head, Saskatchewan, and consisted of Manitoba maples, green ash, willow and cottonwood. The maples, ash and willow are from 6 to 8 feet high, while the cottonwood are 12 feet high. Two years ago he set out 1,300 more trees received from the same place and some sort of trees.

A year ago he set out some 1,500 more trees, among which were some tamaracs. All are doing well.

"Hindenburg Peace" Tract

It Tells Germans the Allies Will Demand $4,000,000,000 a Year.

A copy of one of the circulars being distributed all over Germany by the advocates of a "Hindenburg peace"—that is, more territory and indemnities for the Kaiser—has been obtained through neutral sources by The London Daily Mail.

Headed "Appeal to German Men and Women!" it starts with an "admonition" to remember what Germany's enemies have in pickle for a defeated Fatherland. "Besides great tracts of German territory the foe wants a war indemnity of $4,000,000,000 a year, in order to make us tributary to him for a century. In addition, he wants German mines and German factories to supply him with their products free of charge and to enable the German working classes for his own enrichment. Think of it! Before the war the German imperial debt amounted to only $18.75 per head. If Germany accepts a peace without annexations and indemnities the debt will amount to $625 per head, while the tax burden of every citizen will be quadrupled!"

"After setting forth that it is the duty of every true German, whether Socialist or Junker, to insist upon a strong German peace, for the sake of a healthy future internal development, plenty of work, good wages, and universal national warfare," the appeal concludes:

"Our victory is nearer than ever. The war clock stands at 5 minutes of 12. England's fateful hour will soon strike. Already the Englishman, our greediest and basest enemy, is beginning to feel the pangs of hunger. Only a little while longer, and the Englishman, when he realizes that he is himself about to suffer the death by starvation, which he had planned for us, will cry for an 'understanding.'"

"Then, German souls, be mercifully hard! Let there be no peace at any price—a peace which, with the bad crops all over the world, will not bring us a single extra grain of sustenance and could only result in life-long remorse. Let each one think fully of the future, of his own existence, which comes before any international brotherhood! Let the voice of every man and woman ring out as loudly as possible in demanding a peace which will compel our enemy who has rejected with scorn all our repeated efforts of peace to reimburse us richly for all our sacrifices! German men and women, we are warned! Act accordingly!"

Fluency of Speech

The common fluency of speech in many men and most women is owing to a scarcity of ideas. Donald McAllister, a Scottish farmer, was going to town for a day or two, and his daughter Maggie had a weary time listening to the hundred and one instructions he gave her as to care and economy.

Americans in Canada

A ridiculous rumor is in circulation on the American side of the boundary, to the effect that persons entering Canadian territory run a risk of being conscripted into the Canadian military service. This rumor is ludicrous as it is, is said to have to some extent the effect of deterring American tourists from visiting Canada. As much publicity as possible should be given to contradictions of this rumor. While most tourists would not take such a report seriously there are some who, on hearing a rumor of this kind may allow themselves to be influenced by it to the extent of supposing that they might, in Canada, be subjected to some inconvenience.—Vancouver Sun.

Haig Was Once Rejected

Had Much Trouble in Being Admitted to the Army

Unlike most professional soldiers of the British army, Sir Douglas Haig is a university man. He was graduated from Oxford, where he was renowned at Brasenose College for his prowess on the cricket and football fields, as well as on the river, rather than as a student. He had some difficulty in getting into the army, having been turned down by the medical examiners as color blind. Possessed of means, he invoked the assistance of the leading oculists in England, France and Germany, without avail, and was equally unsuccessful in all his endeavors to secure reconsideration of his case or an exception in his favor by the military authorities.

At last he had the good fortune to attract the attention and to arouse the good will and sympathy of the old Duke of Cambridge, then the head of the army, and he gave special orders admitting Haig to Sandhurst, with the promise of a commission in the cavalry after he had gone through the necessary training there. Had it not been for the Duke, Sir Douglas Haig, now at the head of the largest British force ever assembled under one command, numbering as it does some 200,000 men, would have been kept out of the army and condemned to a civilian career.—By the Marquise de Fontenay.

If Miller's Worm Powders needed the support of testimonials they could be got by the thousands from all over the world. A convincing proof of this excellent medicine. But the powders will speak for themselves, and in such a way that there can be no question of them. They act speedily and thoroughly, and the child to whom they are administered will show improvement from the first dose.

The Junk of War

The debris of war has accumulated to such an extent in France that the government has decided to begin disposing of it without waiting for the end of hostilities. A commission has been appointed to inventory all the materials and equipment that have been discarded by the army or navy, to classify them and ascertain whether they may be of any use or advantage. The commission is asked also to determine where the second-hand material may be used to best facilitate the economic revival in France after the war.

The First Stage

The first stage on the way to peace is that the Germans should get rid of their megalomaniac dreams and bring some intelligent criticism to bear on themselves and their government. After that events may move faster than at present seems probable. If any voice from here reaches the German people, we cannot say too often that we are at war with Prussiaism, and that, though we do not dictate to them how they shall be governed, the guarantees that we require to use their favorite word, must be much stiffer, if at the end of the war we are dealing with the unreformed Prussian system, than if we were dealing with a free Germany which we could trust.—Westminster Gazette.

Girl Guides

Not a Single Soldier on Guard Outside British War Office

Probably there is no other war office in the world at least, in one respect—there is not a soldier on guard either outside or inside the whole building. The task of keeping order is left entirely in the hands of the Metropolitan policemen. Every stranger who enters is asked his business by a constable, fills in an inquiry form under the guidance of a constable, and when he leaves, delivers that form, which serves him as a pass up to another constable. If he requires direction inside the building he is put in charge of a little girl apparently fresh from school, who takes him to the room, he requires. Her only mark of officialdom is a brown oval with a small crown on each point of the collar.

Admiral Beatty's Hero

Nelson's Example Is the Pattern He Would Follow

Go into Admiral Beatty's parlor and glance at the line of books which lie on the table. It is Nelson's dispatches. Look on his desk and you will find a bust of the great admiral. The prints and pictures on the walls here commemorating great deeds of the navy also are fit to the right of the navy's greatest inspiration. Here is the dinner table of the captain of a famous ship of the First Battle Squadron. Note the centerpiece—a silver statuette. Need you ask, whose it is? Nelson stands shining before him as sitting he drinks the king's health in the way of the navy, and the statuette is his mascot. Only once did he leave it behind, and the ship had trouble. That was on manoeuvres, and never since has Nelson been forgotten. His servant, who knew the value the captain attached to it, asked before the battle of Jutland if he would stow the statuette safely away. "No," replied the captain, "he must go through it." And go through it the little statuette did, and the ship that carried him went through it too, and earned fresh laurels.—From the London Daily Telegraph.

PAIN? NOT A BIT!

LIFT YOUR CORNS OR CALLUSES OFF

No humbug! Apply few drops then just lift them away with fingers.

This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezone, and can now be obtained in the bottles as here shown at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezone. Apply a drop or two directly upon a tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it off, root and all, with the fingers.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation; not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezone or afterwards. This drug doesn't eat up the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right out. It is no humbug! It works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn or corn between the toes, or painful calluses on bottom of your feet. It never disappoints and never burns, bites or inflames. If your druggist hasn't it, tell him to get a little bottle for you from his wholesale house.

Aerial Patrol for Sheep Ranch

Flying shepherds may add a picturesque touch to life on western sheep ranches if the plans of a wealthy Montana herdsman prove to be as practicable as they are original. Last season 2,000 of the rancher's sheep wandered into the hills and perished. Therefore he has purchased a biplane and has been receiving instruction at Los Angeles in its operation. He expects to patrol the ranch with the air craft and locate missing flocks. By dropping smoke bombs their positions will be made known. The machine is to be equipped with radio apparatus so as to be in communication with the pack train. If the scheme works out successfully, the rancher contemplates maintaining a flotilla of five air machines, and it is possible that others in the vicinity will do likewise.

How Prohibition Affects Russia

Results So Satisfactory That There Is Small Chance of Return to Old Order

Recently the Russian ministry of finance published a volume in which it discussed the effect of the prohibition of vodka upon the Russian people. The review covers the period from July, 1914, to April, 1915; but while it covers less than a year it is well worth noting its conclusions. It declares that while drunkenness has decreased, church-going has increased; and while vodka shops have disappeared, their place has been taken by tea-houses and eating-houses. Village life has been changed for the better, and prosperity is much in evidence. It is asserted that suicides have decreased considerably while thieving, murder, street fights and such like have decreased in some localities on the average about 46.4 per cent. The health of the people has improved, and beggars have almost disappeared. On account of the village houses being built of wood and straw, fire has been a terrible scourge; but prohibition has lessened the fire rate from 20 to 40 per cent. The deposits in governmental savings banks have increased in an extraordinary degree, and in the province of Perm alone the population has added about $8,000,000 to its wealth this way. The abolition of vodka has greatly increased the efficiency of labor in some cases, in the Moscow industrial district the increase being as high as 25 per cent. The people generally seem glad that the curse has been banished, and there seems small probability that the republic will revert to the evil which the empire put under the ban.—Christian Guardian.

Britain's Coming Air Fleet

No fewer than a hundred factories are engaged on some process or other connected with the construction and equipment of the flying machine. In Great Britain, according to a statement issued by Dr. Addison, output is increasing by leaps and bounds. If, for the purpose of comparison, you put the number of airplanes produced in May, 1916, at 100, then in May of this year the number rose to rather more than 300. To meet the demand for labor, special schools have been started all over the country.

Will Try To Excite Pity

Look Out For This Big German Trick

"We learn from a source that is generally trustworthy that the Germans on their part contemplate the possibility of having recourse to the stratagem of a pseudo-revolution. It has, we are informed, been decided in high quarters to excite the pity of the Allies, and to induce them to conclude an illusive peace by stimulating an intention to introduce a regime of democratic liberalism in Germany. The supreme head of the state has been induced to promise temporary reforms of so radical a nature that the Allies could not help being impressed by them.

"This metamorphosis of Germany would, of course, last only until a favorable peace had been concluded. As the memory of the war faded, Prussia would gradually revert to the old state of affairs, but the aim would have been achieved and Germany would have been saved by ephemeral concessions. We are assured that German agents are working actively and cleverly in the interest of the propagation of this great German plan."—Gazette de Lausanne, (Switzerland).

English Channel Tunnel

A plan for boring four tunnels beneath the English channel within thirty-five days has been submitted to the British cabinet by John K. Hecken, a civil engineer of New York, who claims to have invented a machine which will cut through earth and rock at the rate of 100 feet an hour. Mr. Hecken asserts that he can have the tunnels completed and ready for operation within a few months' time. His plans not only provide for a trackway in each tunnel but a driveway as well, along which motor lorries can be driven from England to the supply bases in France without breaking bulk.

Probably few people in everyday life realize just what position the Army Medical Corps occupies in the gigantic military machine, now fighting against Germany. Many have the idea that when the fighting is all over, the stretcher bearers proceed to the field of battle, and pick up the wounded, in safety, and that this work comprises practically the sum total of the efforts of the Corps in question. Such however, is not the case. True it is that the men of the A. M. C. do pick up the wounded on the battlefield, and give their wounds whatever attention is possible under the circumstances, but often this work is done under the grondest difficulty and danger. Shells and bullets are no respecters of persons, and the Red Cross men are constantly exposed to danger, and without the thrill which helps to keep men of the fighting units up the stress of battle. But as previously intimated, there are many other lines of endeavor, which are looked after by the men in this arm of the Service. Among others are the Field Dressing stations, Collecting Depots, Field and Base Hospitals, and Motor Ambulances. Another very important branch is that of sanitation. When one considers the freedom from disease which is enjoyed by our Armies today, and compare this record with that of previous wars, the efficiency of this branch of the A. M. C. will be readily appreciated.

Every month 100 men are called for, from Canada, for service with the Army Medical Corps Overseas, and of this number Alberta is called upon to supply 40. This is a tribute to the training given to the Alberta men at Training Depot No. 13, which is now carried on at Sarssee Camp. The work, which is of an interesting nature, and likely to be useful to anyone in after life, includes squad and company drill, physical training, stretcher drill, first-aid, bandaging, and the supervising of sanitary conditions. Great emphasis is laid on first-aid to the injured, and lectures, as well as practical instruction in this work, are given by men who know this work thoroly. There is, at the present time, a greater need of men than ever before, for this Corps, to cope with the ever increasing casualties in the Canadian army now doing its part in forcing back the Germans on the Western front.

We would appeal to men of average intelligence and physically fit, whose circumstances will permit, to come with us, and render their services, not only to the Cause of the Allies, but to the even greater cause of Humanity. The Recruiting Headquarters of the C. A. M. C. at Sarssee Camp is ready and anxious at all times to give any information to men who are interested.

ON THE OUTCOME OF WAR DEPENDS ENTIRELY OF DEMOCRACY

ALLIES OF FREEDOM MUST CONQUER OR SUBMIT

French Minister of War Warns Nation That The Determination To Win Must Last To Supreme Hour Of Victory, No Matter How Hard May Be Trials Still To Be Endured

M. Painlevé, French minister of war, in a recent debate in the French chamber said, in part:

"Let us not tire of repeating, for it is the truth, and it is the truth which is our glory of yesterday and our certainty of tomorrow's victory—it is the entire forces of Germany which the French and English armies have had to face during these last months."

"Well, look at the map; compare the firing line in March with the beginning of March and as it is today. Not one foot of ground have we stepped backward, and along the whole front it is the enemy who has given way. It is now that, in our ports, there is disembarking, without loss of man or horse or gun, the first legion of the powerful American army, whose brave and victorious soldiers Paris acclaimed but yesterday."

"Surely, cruel trials still await us, the unknown that our future humanity is bloody; but these trials we shall surmount with constancy and stoicism. What shall be the chances and changes of our victory of the morrow? Shall we beat down German force where it now is, or will it fall back once more beneath our thrust? Yes, the results gained, but there is one thing we may declare now and with certainty—the firmness of our souls depends our destiny. And because we are certain of the future we have nothing to fear from the truth."

"Yes, faults, grave faults, were committed in the course of the last offensive. . . . Yes, the results gained by the offensive—of which, however, we must be careful not to undervalue the importance—were paid too dear. Yes, losses and heavy losses were undergone—oh! not those colossal figures of killed and wounded and prisoners, which mischievous tales, started up no one knows where, circulated through Paris and France—but yet losses too cruel, because they might have been avoided, and must be avoided henceforward."

"Often our epoch has been compared with that of the Revolution. Ours is the greater. The soldiers that marched out over the world, they knew the end of their journey and the triumphal welcome of liberated cities acclaiming the tricolor flag and the soldier's red and white shoes who bore it, the intrepid ambassadors of liberty. Our own soldiers have to live at the same spot in the same bloody mire, day after day, fighting, resisting, dying. History will tell how they have reached the limit of human courage and the very monotony of their sacrifice adds to its grandeur."

"Conquer or submit," says President Wilson. Yes, conquer or submit—that is the alternative, there is no other.

"Submit to what? To some compromise, modest but tolerable? Not at all, but to the heaviest, most hateful most, bitter, serfdom. Tomorrow, let our will seem to give way, let a revolve seem to show in the solid block of our military force, and you will see at our feet, instead of the winning smile of Scheidemann, the pan-German grimace. There would not be one future hour when the French peasant in his old skin and the French workman in his workshop would not be laboring, as an expression that is old has it for the King of Prussia."

"Look around you, among our friends as well as among our enemies—no nation has shown more perfect order than that which has reigned in France, or greater liberty. This must last to the supreme hour of victory, no matter how hard may be the trials we still have to endure. And if one of those weak hearts of whom Kerensky speaks in the burning words of his proclamation should ask me, 'and when will you say that you have reached the aim?' I would answer in the masterly words of the president of the United States: 'We shall attain our end and cease to fight the day democracy is safe.'"

No More Cats in Holland

A Dutchman, importer of tulip bulbs, whose place of business is in New York, but whose family lives in Holland, received a letter from his mother recently, which said:

"With plenty of money it is impossible for me to get enough to eat, and poor kitty was yesterday commandeered by the government for Germany. There are no cats any more in Holland. All of them have been sent to Germany for furs of which they are, as you know, in great need." The letter also states that there are no dogs in Germany—"every domestic animal pet has to give up its life for the fatherland." It is impossible it will be impossible to import tulip tubers this year, as Germany is using them for chemicals and fodder.

Food Conservation

Opinions Expressed on This Vital Question Throughout Canada

"We look to the resources of Canada, and to the industrial energy of Canadians for an answer that will shatter Germany's threat of starvation," says Baron Rhonda, food controller of Great Britain, in a message to Hon. W. J. Hanna, food controller of Canada.

"The primary duty of a food controller is to see that the men at the front do not suffer from want of food, and that our Mother Country and our European Allies should not suffer from want of food," Hon. W. J. Hanna was asked.

"Are you going to exercise it?" "In the cases where we have the necessary data we will not hesitate to check prices," declared Mr. Hanna.

Sir William Hearst, premier of Ontario, fears that shortage of food supplies will hinder the Allies in winning the war.

"We must look calmly and fearlessly at the present situation. Unless there is greater effort, economy and conservation of food, there will be a shortage of supplies to Great Britain and her Allies that will hinder her chances of winning the war," he declared.

"The majority of the people eat too much, anyway," said Miss Edie, professor of household science at the Manitoba agricultural college, when discussing the Canadian food controller's suggestion that hotels and restaurants institute two meals a day a week. "And limiting hotel menus to two or three courses is a fine idea."

The food controllers of Canada and the United States will work in mutual harmony and understanding, Hon. W. J. Hanna, the Canadian food controller and Mr. Herbert Hoover, who know each other for some years.

Britain in twelve months will have to import five months' supplies, according to the statement by Kennedy Jones, director general of food economy, Great Britain. His calculation included the cereals at present on hand, the rate of submarine losses, the new tonnage to be available and the result of the campaign to eliminate food waste. Canada and the United States are looked to for the five months' supplies necessary to be imported.

"It is in the hopes of the province of Ontario that the great battles we are to face will be fought and won," declares Sir William Hearst, premier of Ontario, referring to the food controller's suggestion that the food controller's office, Premier Hearst's words apply to all Canada.

"At first the call was for men, munitions, and money," says food controller of Great Britain, "but now it is for men, munitions and food."

"Food controllers in the States and Canada were appointed in order to see that the food supply was not hoarded," says Hon. W. J. Hanna, Canadian food controller. "In order that those behind at home should not go hungry, in order that Great Britain and her Allies should not have to retreat from the enemy for want of food."

The Allies, including Great Britain, France and Belgium need 400,000,000 bushels of imported wheat. North America will have to supply it.

Memory Comes Back Again

Three Years of Blank Before Famous War Mystery Is Solved in London

A soldier in a London hospital, wounded in October, 1914, in the retreat from Mons, who had lost his memory completely and never been identified, has "come back" after nearly three years and a famous war mystery has been solved.

The man's picture was printed recently and was seen by Joseph Butler, of London. He suspected that it was his brother and sent an old friend to find the mystery man. The patient recognized him and called cheerily, "Hello Jack. Come and sit here and talk with me." He was identified by the visitor as John Butler and later the brother, Joseph, confirmed this.

The only one concerning himself that John Butler had been able to recall was that he had belonged to a Cornwall regiment. At the hospital he was known as John Butler and now on the road to complete recovery.

Sandy's Gift to the Dog-Out

A sergeant writes of one of his comrades in the same trench extolling their deeds. He gives special place to a Scotchman, with a "droll manner even in a Johnnie hard and ginger. He relates one incident."

On the occasion of a raid, he says, the Scot worked his way unseen to the enemy dugout and suddenly peered over the top. It was a cold, rainy night, and a group of Germans were seated about a little stove. "How many of you fellows down there?" he asked. "None," came back a startled and ambiguous reply. "Well, share that among ye," shouted the Scot, and he hurled a bomb which fell just off the ground to avoid the effects of the explosion.

FUTURE OF THE FLYING MACHINE AFTER TERMINATION OF THE WAR

THE DAWN OF THE AIR AGE IS APPROACHING

It Is Believed That It Will Be Feasible To Operate Heavier-than-Air Flying Machines Which Will Carry Fifty Passengers At An Average Speed Of One Hundred Miles Per Hour

Restoration Of Territory Must Be First Move

Germans Fast Losing Confidence In Ability To Stand Another Winter

A London dispatch, to the New York Sun reads:

Berlin, under the pressure of Austria and the disaffected elements in Germany, put forward a serious, direct peace proposal in the autumn, in order to avoid another winter of war, as is almost universally expected here, it is likely to get a cold reception in London and Paris, unless it promises definitely and positively the restoration of all conquered territory, including Alsace and Lorraine and ample indemnity for the damage done.

"It is beyond question that the Germans are fast losing confidence in the ability to withstand another winter of war. Reports to this effect are coming from Great Britain and France from a variety of sources. Thus the Amsterdam Vischerij Courant, after citing other testimony, says:

"We saw a letter today from a big German manufacturer who has often visited the Kaiser, saying that peace can be expected speedily. Last week another German manufacturer of considerable importance declared that Germany does not intend to begin a new winter campaign because the country is unable to carry it through to the end."

"In proportion, however, as German necessities, hopes and plans for peace increase, and other irritating and delaying obstacles. These and other illustrations are no longer the figures of the visionary; they are quite within the feasibility of practical life. The collaborating aviators—Claude Grahame White and Harry Harper—are practical men, and their speculations, farshooting as well within the bounds of moderation."

Everything Violating Regulations

German Food Supply Gets Rapidly Scarcer

Reports from Germany show the steady deterioration of national conditions. The danger of national collapse, such as collisions or explosions, is even now hardly greater in the air than it is on the sea or land, and in the long run it may be very much less, as in the case of an ocean liner, which is driven by many engines and boilers, some of which may be out of use without any worse effect than that of a single engine. The vessel, so the airplane of the future will be fitted with multi-engines driving a number of independent propellers.—Toronto Globe.

The workers then demanded that the representatives of the Miners' Union in the Prussian food controller's office memorialize the Chancellor, threatening immediate reduction in the coal output unless there was more food throughout the country.

Undersized potatoes are being dug extensively and sold at extravagant prices, injuring the crop prospects. Others than consumers must not buy more than two pounds of fruit are being disregarded utterly, the people buying all they possibly can and frequently destroying what is not bought. The inspectors are liable to investigate.

The rich buy and hide all they can get, leaving the markets bare when the poor apply.

A Dusseldorf paper declares everything is violating the regulations, every class conspiring to obtain, and store supplies; exporting districts prohibiting exportation and importing districts offering extra prices. The municipality of Bremen offered potato growers of Hanover an enormous price for new potatoes. The Hanover food authorities promptly threatened to prohibit exports unless the Bremen offer be withdrawn.

Long ago the food controllers promised to increase the bread ration on August 15 and said there would be no reduction in meat rations until then. Now it is announced that the promise cannot be kept. The bread ration will remain stationary and the ration for meat will be reduced sharply. Recently Saxony sharply reduced the meat ration, causing intense Socialist dissatisfaction.

University Students in German Army

Of a total of 42,000 German University students called to the colors up to the conclusion of last fall and winter, 6,000 have been reported as killed, according to figures received at Copenhagen from Berlin.

Berlin University was represented in Germany's fighting ranks by 5,285 men, of whom 500 are dead. Bonn University supplied 3,647, of whom 364 are killed. The figures for some other universities follow: Heidelberg 1,649 called up, 250 killed; Munich 5,255 called up, ten per cent killed; Leipzig 3,700 called up, 644 killed.

"An emergency appeal brings forward a man to meet it."

"I don't know about that. Many of the time I have seen my hat blown down the street when a crowd of men stood by and simply laughed."—Washington Star.

The remarkably rapid evolution of heavier-than-air flying machines, during the three years of the war, naturally suggests the question of applying the war potentiality of this modern invention to some practical use in the next interval of peace. This attractive subject of conjecture is the theme of an interesting article by two British writers in the July number of The Contemporary Review. In their opinion it will be feasible to build, immediately after the war, passenger aircraft, each of which will carry twenty-five or fifty people at an average speed of nearly a hundred miles an hour. These will be followed later by larger craft, fitted with motors developing thousands of horse-power, which should attain a speed of from two hundred to three hundred miles. The potentiality of the airplane is unquestionable; its evolution for peace purposes and service is a matter of co-operation among inventors, organizers, and capitalists.

Some of the possibilities of achievement in travelling are more than interesting. Instead of a business man consuming seven hours in travelling by sea and rail between London and Paris, he will be able to make it comfortably in one hour. The time needed for crossing the Atlantic and returning between Britain and America will be reduced to forty-eight hours. A business man may embark on an airplane at Petrograd in the morning and find himself in London the same evening, avoiding all frontier delays, the use of passports, and other irritating and delaying obstacles. These and other illustrations are no longer the figures of the visionary; they are quite within the feasibility of practical life. The collaborating aviators—Claude Grahame White and Harry Harper—are practical men, and their speculations, farshooting as well within the bounds of moderation."

The question of comparative risk, as among modes of travelling by land, sea and air, respectively, is dealt with, and so is the need of a common speech, like Esperanto, as a means of cosmopolitan communication. The danger of national collapse, such as collisions or explosions, is even now hardly greater in the air than it is on the sea or land, and in the long run it may be very much less, as in the case of an ocean liner, which is driven by many engines and boilers, some of which may be out of use without any worse effect than that of a single engine. The vessel, so the airplane of the future will be fitted with multi-engines driving a number of independent propellers.—Toronto Globe.

Rifle's Day Not Over

Is Still a Valuable and Dangerous Weapon

The overwhelming position in the war picture occupied by the big guns, the machine guns and Lewis guns, the importance of trench mortars, hand grenades, and other accessories of trench warfare, make some men think that the day of the rifle as an important adjunct to success in battle is well-nigh past.

Such is not the case. Those of us who can remember the brave advances of the Russian Guard at Ypres, when they worked in battalion formation right up to the Menin road, straight at our trenches—on one occasion, if not more, marching to almost sure death at the goose step—know the value of accurate, rapid rifle fire. So do these Prussian guardsmen, if any of them are still alive. Not many of them were left when the broken waves of gray were swept back, like leaves by an autumn wind.

The rifle did most of it. Machine guns we had to be sure, but woefully few of them. Those that we had were overworked to a point that made us wonder, not when they jammed, but when they worked long without jamming. The rifle in the hands of a man who can shoot straight and shoot with great rapidity, is a wicked weapon still, and the value of cold steel, though it is not a subject on which men who have seen it used love to dwell, has not, so far as we know, been greatly if at all, in the three years of grim war in Europe.

Take Nothing for Granted

We are at war with the most mercies and inhuman man in the world. Hundreds of thousands of its people in this country want to see America humiliated and beaten to the knees, when they are told and will do, everything in their power to bring this about. Take nothing for granted. Energy and alertness in this hour may mean the difference between your son, your husband or your brother.—Providence Journal.
